

The Pink Heart Medal

Cancer is responsible for the last breath of more people than those killed by all wars combined in our history. It has made us shed more tears out of sadness, than all poured out of joy for seeing our children being born. Above all, it has forced us to accept the deliberation of fate when randomly it chooses us as next, because like it or not, resigned, we must admit how vulnerable we truly are.

The “Pink Heart” medal denotes human consciousness towards a stealthy disease that for centuries has taken away our loved ones. Although the medal colors represent; raising awareness about breast cancer, its true purpose is to honor the valor and resilience of cancer patients and survivors.

The Pink Heart medal, shows unison with anyone who has suffered from this disease. It embraces all those whose eyes have blurred upon learning about a positive diagnosis. It stands in silent sadness when, remembering our fallen, we crumble down on our knees. Also, with humility, it thanks anyone who wants to help.

For now, we can only trust that our scientists, warrior doctors, can decipher the enigma-pattern of our enemy’s unscrupulous scrutiny.